I hope the massive increase of SUVs on our roads has been scoped as a possible cause of the increase in accidents.

People take their driving test in a tame sedan and then go out and buy a SUV that they have never driven before.

Having had my licence for 50 years and having sedans and SUVs, you actually have to drive differently. The high centre of gravity is a major factor in roll over accidents.

I see it all day every day in shopping centres. People cannot even judge when to turn into a parking space, often reversing several times. And heaven help me if they try and reverse into the space, not a clue.

Unless you take your test in a SUV, you should not be allowed to drive one.
